

General Assembly session is a dangerous time

Annapolis, MD - Each year, Maryland has a 90-day Legislative Session. Thousands of bills are proposed each year - some good and others problematic.

And so the question arises: How does Virginia, a much larger state, survive with only a 60-day Session during even years - and a 46-day Session during odd years?

The answer is simple - Annapolis elites believe that your prosperity comes from government. They believe in command and control economy.

But, it doesn't have to be this way. A shorter 60-day Legislative Session is a good start. When a legislature has less time to meet, there's less time to meddle.

This guiding principle of limited government rings true:

"A government big enough to give you everything you want, is powerful enough to take everything you have!"

And so it goes in Maryland...
